Ready & Resilient:

Combating Water Hazards in an Era of Extreme Weather

Wednesday, December 6, 2017 | 8:30 a.m. - 1:00 p.m.
Embassy Suites Orlando Lake Buena Vista South

Recent events have reminded us of the power extreme weather has on lives, property and communities. The potential of water to transform our thriving cities into struggling recovery zones demands municipal governments take action now to reduce and prevent vulnerabilities in the future. During this half-day event, we will discuss the impacts water disasters have on our coastal and inland communities; explore the connection between land-use planning, economic development and storm water management; and share tools to assist in long-range planning and smart infrastructure investments. City managers, planners, water utility directors and elected leaders are encouraged to join us on Wednesday, December 6, as we forge a path into a water-resilient future.
